National Democratic Party of Germany (NPD) Demonstration in Dresden (February 13, 2005)

Abstract

German right-wing groups tried to profit politically from the country's broad rejection of American policies in the Middle East. Here, the National Democratic Party of Germany (NPD) seized upon the 60th anniversary of the Allied bombing of Dresden during the Second War, treating it as an opportunity to critique American foreign policy, past and present. The proclamation on the banner "No more bomb terror" cynically evoked the catchphrases of the German left ("Never again Auschwitz" and "Never again war").

Source

Source: February 13, 2005, Dresden, Saxony—NPD march through the city center to mark the 60th anniversary of the bombing of Dresden. The demonstration was led (from left to right) by NPD faction leader in Saxony Holger Apfel, along with Gerhard Frey, Udo Voigt, and Franz Schönhuber. They carry a banner reading "No more bomb terror." Photo: Trappe.

© Agencja Fotograficzna Caro / Alamy Stock Photo

Recommended Citation: National Democratic Party of Germany (NPD) Demonstration in Dresden (February 13, 2005), published in: German History Intersections, <https://germanhistory-intersections.org/en/germanness/ghis:image-213> [September 14, 2026].