

Hermann Staudinger, Macromolecules (1953)

Abstract

The chemist Hermann Staudinger (1881-1965) was the founder of macromolecular chemistry. His particular research interest was polymerization, from which complex molecular chains arose. In 1922, Staudinger coined the term “macromolecule” to describe the model he held in his hands.

Source

Source: Hermann Staudinger, Freiburg, Germany, November 3, 1953. Photo: Albert Riethausen.

© Albert Riethausen/AP/Shutterstock

Recommended Citation: Hermann Staudinger, Macromolecules (1953), published in: German History Intersections, <<https://germanhistory-intersections.org/en/knowledge-and-education/ghis:image-25>> [April 29, 2024].